At about this time last year, I remarked that 2004 “was a year of firsts.” If that was the case, then this year should be a year of seconds.

And it was.

Most obviously, of course, it was my second year as director, and so I should know everything by now. Not quite.

2005 also marked the second decade of the CCC, since this year’s contest was the 10th we have had. I think the contest has come a long way, and still has a way to go, but I think the next decade looks very promising.

Finally, the CCC entered in a joint collaboration with the University of Hong Kong to offer the contest to Hong Kong high school students. These competitors are not listed here (since we are listing only the Canadian Competitors). More information on this can be found at: <http://www.cs.hku.hk/ccc2005/>. Overall, I think the collaboration was successful for the University of Hong Kong, the University of Waterloo and computing generally. (It was comforting to know that immediately after the contest in Hong Kong, all the competitors starting conversing with each other. Even though I didn’t speak Cantonese, I knew these students were saying: “How did you solve question 2? Did you figure out question 5?” etc. Students are the same the world over!)

A detailed summary of problems (with solutions and descriptions of solutions) will be posted on the CCC website by the end of May 2005. Below, a qualitative summary of both the Junior and Senior contest is presented.

Generally, we are attempting to make the Junior contest on linear difficulty curve: the first problem should be solvable by students with very little programming experience, the second should be a bit more difficult, and so on, until question 5 is using some more advanced feature of programming (this year, the idea of recursion was emphasized on Problem Junior 5). This year, we got a fairly good slope, and generally very positive feedback on the Junior problems.

On the Senior problems, the first two problems were generally well done, and the last two were meant to be separator questions. The third problem seemed to be more difficult than we intended, but overall, the range of scores was quite good.

I hope you found the contest this year interesting and educational, fun and intriguing. Thanks for being a part of it.
